Stanley Cup Finds its Way Back to Slovenia

On Saturday, June 14, 2014, the LA Kings were crowned for the second time in three years as National Hockey League (NHL) Champions, defeating the New York Rangers by sealing a 4-1 series victory. In a dramatic fifth game, it was Alec Martinez #27, who scored the decisive goal in the 95th minute and brought the Stanley Cup back home to the Staples Center, LA. However, this victory would have been impossible without the best Slovenian athlete at the moment, Anže Kopitar #11.

Kopitar, also known as "Kopi", played a crucial role already during the race to the 2012 Stanley Cup Championship and at that time the 24-year-old Slovenian superstar gained much attention. This year, his outstanding performances led him to become the first Slovenian hockey player to win the Stanley Cup as a scoring leader, with a starring performance in points (26) and goals (5). Already before the beginning of the Stanley Cup play-off final, the former Canadian hockey player Wayne Gretzky, also known as "The Great One", declared Kopitar as the third best player in the NHL and proclaimed the final to be "Kopitar's series". He was right.

Kopi was born on August 24, 1987, in the small town of Hrušica, located in the northeastern part of Slovenia. Since Kopitar is a Slovenian hockey idol, many Slovenians stayed up all night to watch his performance during the last play-off final. Already during his race for the 2012 Stanley Cup, his home town of Hrušica decided to screen the games in the town square. This year, the organizers organized a public viewing in the 5,500-seat Sports Hall Podmežakla, Jesenice, where Kopi stood for the first time on his skates. Thanks to Kopi, the Stanley Cup arrived for the first time to Slovenia on July 6, 2012, when despite a heavy rain in Kopitar's hometown of Hrušica, nearly 5,000 people welcomed the Stanley Cup to Slovenia. Stanley Cup will again be back in Slovenia this summer and will enjoy its beauties. The organizers expect that, this time, even more people will come to welcome Kopi and his prestigious trophy. Immediately after the LA King's victory on June 14, Slovenian President Borut Pahor congratulated Anže Kopitar via Facebook and Twitter. Slovenia's ambassador to the U.S., Dr. Božo Cerar, also recognized Kopitar on his latest achievement.

Anže Kopitar brought Stanley Cup to his hometown Hrušica already in 2012.

Jesenice and Hrušica

The town of Jesenice, which lies on the southern, Slovenian, side of the mountain range of the Karavanke in the Upper Carniola region, got its name from the name of the ash tree (in Slovene: jêsen), which once grew in abundance locally. The German name for Jesenice is Assling, which was first mentioned as early as 1004. At that time, the name Assling only marked an area on the banks of the Jesenica creek. Later, a settlement slowly started to grow around the area where St. Leonard's church is located today.

The history of Jesenice is closely connected with its ironworks and metallurgy. The oldest source on the early history of Jesenice is a list of mining rights, issued to the Carinthian counts of Ortenburg, dating to 1381, but the first settlements in the area were founded on the southern slopes higher in the Karavanke mountain range. With the development of new techniques of extraction of iron from ore, the need for water energy grew, and the small streams on the slopes of the Karavanke were no longer sufficient. The ore-extracting industry was relocated in 1538, when Bernardo Bucellini from Bergamo gained permission from the Habsburg king Ferdinand I to move the ironworks to a larger water source, the Sava river, creating a settlement that was to become Jesenice. The ironworks, however, continued to mine iron ore on the slopes of the Karavanke.

Different iron foundries belonged to different owners (the Zois, Ruard, and Bucellini families) and did not interact. This situation continued until the 19th century, when the Luckmann family from Ljubljana agreed to modernize the iron foundries through the new shareholder company, the Kranjska Industrijska Družba - Carniolan Industrial Company (KID). Thus, in 1869, all the Upper Carniolan ironworks were joined -- for the first time -- by the Luckmann family under a single administration, with central management in Ljubljana and business administration in Jesenice. The greatest achievement of KID was the discovery of a process for obtaining ferromanganese in a smelting furnace. This innovation brought KID a gold medal at the World Exhibition in Vienna in 1873 and worldwide fame.

KID was also the basis for a new ironworks facility, which still provides employment today. The new facility started expanding quickly, from medieval-style iron foundries to up-to-date modern ironworks in just a few years. The town of Jesenice grew almost exponentially, with a great influx of people attracted to the newly created jobs.

Above the town of Jesenice, one can find Golica (6,024 ft), a peak especially known for its fields of wild white narcissi, swathes of which cover Golica and surrounding pastures in late April and early May.

Today, Jesenice is mostly known as the home of Slovenia's largest steel company, Acroni, and the hockey club, Acroni Jesenice, it sponsored. Unfortunately, the latter no longer exists, but it is hockey club HD Mladi Jesenice that continues the rich hockey tradition in Jesenice. The club has been very successful, indeed, as Anže Kopitar, its long-time member is now ice hockey center and alternate captain of the Los Angeles Kings of the NHL, the first Slovenian ever to play in the League.

Anže Kopitar originally comes from the village of Hrušica, a settlement 2 miles west of Jesenice along the main road to Kranjska Gora. The settlement has less than 2000 inhabitants and is, next to its famous athlete, best known for the 7,976 m (cca. 5 miles) long two-track Karavanke railway tunnel connecting Slovenia with Austria, which was finished in 1906, and the 7,864 m (cca. 4.8 miles long road tunnel, completed in 1991.
