square miles (1% of the total land area) of Slovenia and, since they are spread over distinct wine regions with diverse geological composition, the wine selection offers a palette of tastes.

Ms. Petra Stušek, acting director of Tourism Ljubljana, then presented Slovenia's biggest city and its 2000-years-old history. It was in late 14 A.D. that the construction of the Roman colony of Emona (Colonia Iulia Aemona) on the site of the present-day Ljubljana was completed. 2000 years later, in 2014, in celebration of the anniversary, the capital of Slovenia is hosting a vibrant program of events, exhibitions, and experiences.

The wine presented at the tasting, and also available in many restaurants and wine bars in Ljubljana as well as in the U.S., was mainly from the Goriška Brda region of Slovenia. Besides the Colliano wines (Colliano Cuvee White, Colliano Cuvee Red, sparkling Colliano Ribolla Gialla, and Colliano Peneča Rebula) the tasting also featured wines by Santomas (Cabernet Sauvignon), Kocijančič Zanut (Merlot) and Edi Simčič (Giocato Pinot Grigio) wine makers. Next to the wine selection, the guests could also enjoy Slovenian culinary specialties such as Carniolian Pork Sausage, Karst Prosciutto Ham, sirovi štruklji cheese rolls, apple strudel, Bled cream slices, sweet tarragon potica roll, Brkini cheese, and, from Ljubljana, Prešeren's chocolate pralines. FDI Summit 2014 International Development Conference in Ljubljana Panel discussion in cooperation with Amcham Slovenia hosted by Ms. Ajša Vodnik.

A commitment to privatization and continuing reforms was delivered by Slovenian officials at a high-level conference dedicated to foreign direct investment in Ljubljana on Wednesday, October 22. The FDI Summit Slovenia 2014, an international development conference, highlighted the current situation in the Slovenian economy and defined the key measures for recovery from the ongoing challenges and the support for sustainable growth going forward. In addition to long term stabilization of public finances, the key issue for further development was associated with the acquisition of adequate resources for investments. In this context, the focus of the Summit was the role of foreign investors in raising the competitiveness of the Slovenian economy and improving the quality of corporate governance.

More than 20 prominent speakers, among them a number of CEOs of renowned domestic and foreign companies in Slovenia, potential investors and the most important Slovenian political decision-makers attended the event. "The new government is ready to push ahead with strategically considered privatization," Prime Minister, Miro Cerar, told the annual conference. While key infrastructure will remain in state ownership, business stakes will be sold based on an asset management strategy that is being drafted.

Moreover, PM Cerar announced that the government was committed to reforms which will make Slovenia a more appealing destination for foreign investors. The government priorities include balancing public finances and completing bank restructuring to provide for a stable financial system. Expanding on this, Finance Minister, Dušan Mramor, said the government was planning sweeping measures to help companies and improve the business environment, although it would first focus on sorting out public finances in line with E.U. debt and deficit rules.

The minister said that the government's first task would be to make "Slovenia a macroeconomic success story". A lot has already been done but Slovenia must still fulfil requirements under the E.U.'s procedures on macroeconomic imbalances and excessive deficit. The pledges by government officials were welcomed by several business representatives attending the event, who addressed the necessity of privatization, and outlined that the essential goal of the state must be to define a basic and effective development strategy, strategic projects within a clear framework based on clear criteria to define the role of foreign capital. Some very rare and special archeological objects (exhibited also in the Archaeological Museum in Vienna) were found there, which only testifies how important that area was in history and it still is. In view of the area's historical importance, the House of living heritage (Hiša žive dediščine) will be opened in Bela Cerkev in 2015, with a permanent exhibition of archeological subjects, and featuring culinary and ethnological events.

PSALMS IN NEW YORK performed by CARMINA SLOVENICA

"Chorus can take over from us and experience for us our innermost and most spontaneous feelings and attitudes, inclusive of crying and laughing." Žižek.
The choir manifests a collective body and, as an organism, reflects a human desire to merge. At the same time, it manifests social phantasms. The collective becomes an individuum and an individuum becomes a part of the collective. A non-individual voice, a sound of the multitude of voices -- a choir, the whole union of bodies in a crowd creates an illusion of humanity as a single human being. Analogical of this monology (the choir works as a single character), the choir on stage (the choir works as a multitude) works as a mirror and partner of the audience. In Toxic Psalms, the Chorus represents the views of the contemporary society holding up certain moral and cultural standards -- much like the media does in our daily lives.
