Inferno, A Fight For and The Lore of Fire at the Cleveland International Film Festival

After the showing at St. Vitus Village, Mr. Sipoš had a question and answer period covering his movies.

Inferno, a film that describes the trials and travails that affect the Ljubljana working-class family, presented last week as part of the 39th Cleveland International Film Festival (CIFF), was in full swing from March 18 – March 29 at the Tower City Center in downtown Cleveland, Ohio. Directed by Vinko Möderndorfer, the film focuses on a young unemployed family, which, like any other ordinary European family, is trying to make a living with the work of their hands and which due to the global economic crisis end their life up in a blind alley.

Next to the feature film Inferno, two Slovenian documentaries were shown at the CIFF: A Fight For and Kresnik: The Lore of Fire. A Fight For, a documentary by Siniša Gačić narrates a story about the protest in front of the Ljubljana Stock Exchange in the autumn of 2012 that followed the Occupy Wall Street protest movement. Kresnik: The Lore of Fire, produced by Slovenian film director David Sipoš, is a short fantasy film which addresses themes of growing up, independence, friendship, self-confidence and courage. Through its story, the film also deals with motives from Slavic mythology, through which the authors are reviving our almost forgotten historical heritage and drawing attention to the by-and-large unfulfilled potential of fantasy film in Slovenia.

The film director David Sipoš also visited Cleveland for the CIFF and had another of his films, Čudež – The Miracle, screened at St. Vitus' Village in Cleveland. This and other works of David Sipoš can be found at <http://www.siposh.com>.

The Alpine Villages at the Foot of Mt. Triglav

Huddled below Mt. Triglav (2864m; 9370 ft.), the highest peak in Slovenia and its national symbol, four attractive alpine villages, Mojstrana, Dovje, Zgornja Radovna, and Belca, are home to a rich cultural heritage, healthy climate, the Triglav fairy tales and friendly but stubborn locals, who have throughout centuries grown accustomed to the harsh but beautiful alpine environment.

In the mid-19th century, the village of Mojstrana was known for its cement works, located close to natural limestone, chalk and other sources of materials used to manufacture cement. This was primarily exported, and used even in the construction of the Suez Canal and the colonial Fort Canning in Singapore. At the same time, the village witnessed a growing interest in mountaineering. It was in one of Mojstrana's oldest inns, Pr' Šmercu, that the renowned botanist Julius Kugy hired mountain guides to help him climb Triglav, while the wild beauty of the local scenery inspired the German poet Rudolf Baumbach to put into verse the story of the Goldenhorn. This rich mountaineering history is probably also the reason why

Julian Alps.

Mojstrana is home to the Slovene Alpine Museum.

Many of the 18th century peasant baroque houses remain to this day, including the former home of the beekeeper Mihael Ambrožič, whose Carniolan honeybees gained him recognition in Germany, France and the Czech Republic.

Mojstrana and its surrounding villages are also key entry points to the picturesque glacier valleys of Vrata, Kot, Radovna, and Krma. The Vrata valley holds two of the most popular tourist attractions in Slovenia: the stunning Peričnik waterfall and the massive 1000 m (3273 ft.) high Triglav North Face.

At the foot of Mt. Triglav and its North Face is Aljažev dom, the mountain lodge built by the Dovje parish priest Jakob Aljaž, who played an important role in the 19th century Slovene national revival. He bought the top of Triglav, where he built a tower and thus symbolically won the 'battle' between Slovene and German mountaineers in the Julian Alps 120 years ago. Aljaž not only built various mountain lodges, he also installed a water supply network in the village of Dovje, and encouraged the love of the Slovene language and song among the peasant population. In his honor, the locals erected a statue of the priest, pointing to his beloved Triglav, while he found his final resting place next to various well-known mountaineers in the Dovje cemetery.

The authentic alpine village of Dovje is also home to some impressive rural architecture: the church of St. Michael, and a former smithy, restored into the Pr' Katr inn offering typical traditional cuisine of northwestern Slovenia. The village is an ideal starting point for hikes in the Karavanke range. This natural border between Slovenia and Austria offers stunning views of the Julian Alps.

One may even catch a glimpse of the Zgornja Radovna valley, scattered with hummocky meadows. The valley has retained its traditional, peaceful character and is home to the Pocarjeva domačija homestead, dating from 1609, and the 400-year-old Gogal linden tree, as well as other sights of interest such as the Psnak mill and the Napoleon stone. Its peaceful forests used to be a royal hunting ground of the Yugoslav Karadjordjević dynasty, and the valley's beauty attracted even Britain's Prince Charles, who visited Radovna about 20 years ago.

With its 100 inhabitants, the village of Belca is too small for a church or an inn, but boasts an "Olympic street", the home of two Olympic hockey players and a ski jumper. Together, the four villages have seen 21 of their inhabitants compete in the Olympic Games, with two, Alenka Dovžan and Jure Košir, returning with medals.
