Zapik Theater at the Kids Euro Festival 2015

Igor Cvetko and Jelena Sitar Cvetko.

This fall, Washington, DC hosted the Kids Euro Festival, one of the country's largest performing arts festivals for children. This, the eighth edition of the festival featured more than 125 free events around the city. The two-week long festival was geared to kids ages two through twelve. From October 24 to November 8 the event presented artists in almost every performing genre, including puppetry, dance, music, theater, magic, and storytelling. Also, several films and workshops were organized to showcase favorite stories from the E.U. Member States.

Kids Euro Festival is annually staged through the collaboration of the 28 Washington-based European Union embassies, and features artists from all 28 E.U. member countries, who perform in 30 major local cultural institutions. Slovenia was this year represented by Ms. Jelena Sitar Cvetko and Mr. Igor Cvetko of the Zapik Puppet Theater, who introduced to the American audience traditional Slovenian finger-puppet theater through the play Miška kaško kuhala/The Mouse was cooking Porridge. In it, the puppets hide, steal chocolate, fall into water (and get safely out of it), carry corn into a mill, bake bread and cook porridge with the help of a mouse. The charming stories were brought to life through interactive performance with live music played on traditional instruments from around the world.

Musician and illustrator Igor Cvetko and director Jelena Sitar Cvetko created Zapik (<http://www.lutke-zapik.si/>) more than 10 years ago and have since toured with the show several other countries, including Russia, the U.K., and France. The show also won many awards at international festivals.

In Washington, the puppeteers showcased altogether 7 shows in English, and one in the Slovene language for local Slovenian families. On Monday, October 26, they also appeared on TV Channel 9 WUSA morning show, Great Day Washington. You can watch the clip at: <http://www.wusa9.com/videos/entertainment/television/programs/great-day-washington/2015/10/26/kids-euro-festival-2015/74622420/>

In presenting the program in the framework of the Kids Euro festival, this year the Embassy of Slovenia collaborated with the Hillwood Estate, Museum and Gardens, the Hill Center at the Old Naval Hospital, the Children's Inn at the NIH, Mann Elementary School (within the framework of the Embassy School Adoption Program) and the Library of Congress, where Ambassador Dr. Cerar read the children's book, Little Mountain-Fish Goes to Sea, which he authored. The book, written in Slovenian, tells the story of a curious little fish living in a mountain creek, which wants to see the sea, and the adventures it runs into in its journey down the river to the sea and back. The book was translated into English by Vladimir Pregelj and illustrated by Miro and Metka Zupančič.

Readings and Discussions with Poet Aleš Šteger

Aleš Šteger.

The European Division of the Library of Congress, in partnership with the Embassy of Slovenia, organized on November 5 a literary event with the Slovenian poet, writer, editor and literary critic Aleš Šteger. At the book talk, Šteger read prose and poetry from his recently published books and talked about his work as a publisher, editor, author and program director of various literature festivals, including the Days of Wine and Poetry, which will next year celebrate 20 years since its launching. He also discussed his performative writing project, Written on Site, he has been working on since 2012.

The next day, Aleš Šteger introduced his latest book translated into English, titled Berlin, at the Washington Goethe Institute. The reading in German, English and Slovene and a discussion addressed the flâneur concept in German literature and his experiences when he lived and wrote in and about Berlin, the new/old European poetic capital.

From Washington, Šteger traveled to New York to appear together with poet Tone Škrjanec at the Bowery Poetry Club at the launch of Trafika Europe 5 – a Slovenian Interlude event. Trafika Europe is a NYC festival as well as an online platform, which features the new literature from all over Europe. The latest edition included Slovenian literature by Maja Haderlap, Goran Vojnović, Tone Škrjanec, Barbara Pogačnik and Aleš Šteger. Next week, on Friday November 13, Aleš Šteger also will present his book, Berlin (by Counterpathpress) in Boston at the Brookline Booksmith, jointly with its translator Brian Henry.

The most translated Slovenian author of his generation (his books have been translated into 16 languages), Šteger has published poetry, novels, and essays. His texts have appeared in The New Yorker and many other international magazines. He has received numerous awards for his work, including the 2007 Rožanc Award for the best book of Slovenian essays (for Berlin). Among other prizes and honors, his English translation of Knjiga reči (The Book of Things, BOA Editions, 2010) won two mayor U.S. translation awards (BTBA award and AATSEL). He was accorded the title of Chevalier des Artes et Lettres from the French government, and is a member of the Berlin Academy of Arts.

On Friday October 30 evening, Honorary Consul Tom Brandi, Slovenian American Educational Foundation and Club Slovenia jointly organized the Annual Slovenian Film Night. This year's event featured the war drama No Man's Land, a co-production of companies in Bosnia-Herzegovina, Slovenia, Italy, France, Belgium and the U.K. The film won the Oscar for Best Foreign Language Film in 2001. The screening was attended by members of the Slovenian community in the San Francisco Bay Area and took place in the historic Slovenian Hall in San Francisco. Wine was provided for the occasion by the Blue Danube Wine Company.

Slovenian Students Receive Gold at U.S. Science Competition

A team of eight secondary school students received the gold medal at the 2015 International Genetically Engineered Machine competition in Boston, Mass. The students found a method for obtaining biofuel from organic waste. The team, under the mentorship of the National Institute of Chemistry and the Faculty of Chemistry and Chemical Technology, competed in the secondary-school category against 35 teams from all over the world.

They presented a system of bioreactors which converts organic acid into biobutanol, a compound very similar to conventional fuels. The students impressed the iGEM jury with the scope and quality of their research, which surpassed the efforts of their competitors in many ways, said Albin Pintar, the students' mentor and Head of the Laboratory for Environmental Sciences and Engineering at the Institute of Chemistry.

According to Pintar, the project has much potential for further research in the coming decades. "The students' research can be easily scaled to the industrial level," he says. The competition is organized every year by the International Genetically Engineered Machine Foundation, an independent, non-profit organization, held at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology (MIT). This year, it took place between September 24 and 28 and was attended by 280 teams from all over the world.

PUBLIC DIPLOMACY

Slovenia Presented at Cultural Festival in Mount Vernon

On October 10, 2015, Slovenia and its rich heritage were introduced at the Cultural Festival in Mount Vernon, VA, hosted by the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter day Saints. Slovenia was among some 40 countries, which presented their culture, traditions, language, and food. The festival was themed "Love One Another", emphasizing tolerance, unity, and mutual understanding of our differences as well as commonalities. Slovenia's booth was hosted by Tanja Uzar, who appropriately headed the presentation by saying that one cannot say SLOVEnia without saying LOVE. The booth featured the Slovenian flag, a large banner, pamphlets, fun facts, and, of course, potica, all donated by the Embassy of Slovenia in Washington.

The visitors were impressed by information on the economic development of Slovenia and its --despite its small size -- rich cultural and natural heritage. Many visitors were interested in the spa resorts, opportunities for hiking, and especially the central geographical location of Slovenia, which makes it a convenient stop on the way to many destinations in Europe. Children loved learning about the Lipizzaner horses and the beautiful underground caves, such as the Postojna. Some visitors remarked they were surprised that they had not heard of Slovenia earlier or had not been aware of its natural and cultural beauty. Tasting potica (walnut-roll cake), baked by Sophie's Catering and Baking, was the greatest success and a true testament to the rich culinary heritage of Slovenia. Four large trays served throughout the evening disappeared very quickly.

One of the visitors attended the festival particularly to see and hear the presentation of Slovenia, the home of her ancestors. She reminisced about her grandmother preparing potica for the holidays, when she visited her in Slovenia as a child. The presentation ended with a short introduction to the Slovenian language, such as learning to say "I love You" in Slovenian ("rada te imam", "ljubim te"), and the invitation to visit and vacation in Slovenia. Postal and Telecommunications Museum

What better way to learn about Slovenia's history, art and heritage than by visiting various museums spread throughout the country? When making a list of things to do in Slovenia, do not forget about interesting galleries and museum collections. We will do our best to introduce as many as possible in our newsletter.

The Postal and Telecommunications Museum is a detached unit of the Technical Museum of Slovenia. Formerly (1985-2008) housed in the Stara Loka castle in Škofja Loka, the museum is now located in the Polhov Gradec castle. Earliest written records indicate that the castle was built in 1315.

Originally constructed of wood, it was replaced in the 14th and 15th centuries by a masonry building. Still extant from the early construction stages are an interior wooden ceiling and stone Gothic portals. In 1999, the castle, together with the park and Neptune's fountain, were declared a cultural monument of national significance, and in 2008 the Ministry of Culture passed it over to the management of the Technical Museum of Slovenia.

The Postal and Communications Museum contains exhibitions on Postal History, History of Telecommunications, and Živa's Corner, which is intended for the youngest visitors. The Postal History exhibit provides an introduction to the development of postal services from prehistoric times until the present.

Four rooms contain models of postal carriages, reconstructions of post offices, uniforms of postal workers from different periods as well as a variety of postal transportation (e.g., horse-drawn carriage, bicycle, motorbike). Special attention is given to Lovrenc Košir, who is considered father of the postage stamp. Visitors can watch short films about the postal service, an animated film entitled Whose is the Letter? and listen to the tunes of the postal horn, an indispensable part of postilion's equipment. The History of Telecommunications exhibition takes visitors through the history of telecommunications, from the first electrical telegraph, telephones, teleprinters and telephoto equipment through Yugoslavia's first automatic telephone exchange in 1927. The exhibition pays special attention to women telephone and telegraph operators. The development of telephony and telegraphy significantly contributed to the provision of new jobs, which were predominantly taken by women. The displays include a wide collection of equipment for sending messages over large distances. Visitors can listen 'over the phone' to how people used the telephone in the past and try out a telephone and a teleprinter exchange. A new exhibition, (Tele)communications in the Past, Present, and the Future!, was opened in 2015, offering a view of the development of mobile telephony in Slovenia and the world.

Živa's Corner aims at familiarizing the youngest museum visitors with the history of postal services and telecommunications with the help of games (Find the Pair, Postal Services Through Time) and various workshops (making a postilion's horn, postal worker's cap, rubber stamps etc.).
