Celebrating National Day of Culture

As festivities were held across the Slovenia on Sunday, February 8, when Slovenians traditionally observe their Cultural Day, a national holiday dedicated to Slovenia's foremost poet, France Prešeren, the Embassy of Slovenia in Washington hosted a reception for the occasion on February 5, evening. The event featured two young Slovenian visual artists, painter Barbara Jurkovšek and conceptual artist Ištvan Išt Huzjan.

In his address to over 100 guests, Ambassador Dr. Cerar outlined the poet's contribution to Slovenia's national identity and his distinctive contribution to the formation of Slovenia as a nation, having lifted the Slovenian language to the European level of literally expression. Besides the ambassador, European Parliament Member and the first Prime Minister of the independent Slovenia, Lojze Peterle, who was in D.C. for an official visit, in his remarks also stressed the importance of culture for national unity and for paving the way to Slovenia's statehood.

The remarks were followed by the opening of the exhibition, titled "Things", by the artist, Barbara Jurkovšek. The exhibition presented a series of works on burlap in mixed technique, created since 2013, which as a special characteristic include the use of calligraphic and typographical elements. The art project relates to figures of animalistic creatures as one of her central motifs, from their embryonic state on. The aim of the artist is to draw attention to the increasingly present problem of »human-animal hybrids« in today's world, which is reflected also in contemporary art and pop culture.

Ištvan Išt Huzjan, who during the month of February

Address by MEP Lojze Peterle, next to him is Ambassador Dr. Božo Cerar, resides as the artist-in-residence in Slovenian Ministry of Culture's apartment in New York, presented on the occasion his book entitled "OHO and the Korean Avant-Garde Association". The publication is a compilation of images from work of two neo-conceptual artistic movements from the late 60's and early 70's that have despite of geographic distance and no knowledge about each other produced formally similar work. The presentation featured Huzjan's performance titled "Od tu do tu"

("From here to there") during which the artist talked about his work and the context of the publication. He also presented his travel drawings with pen on boarding passes, photographs and unique sculptures – keys that open no doors.

An event celebrating the Slovenian cultural day was also held at Marlene Tavern in New York, organized by Branch 93 of the Slovenian Union of America. The program included reading of poetry by Kajeten Kovič, Ciril Zlobec, Janez Menart, Tone Pavček, Alojz

Gradnik – and France Prešeren -- and a live music performance by Jan Kus on saxophone, along with Sean Fitzpatrick, piano, and Dan Martinez, double bass. Slovenian Cultural Holiday Programs were also held in Indianapolis's Slovenian National Home, sponsored by the Indianapolis-Piran Sister Cities Committee, at the Slovenian Catholic and Cultural Center in Lemont, IL and elsewhere in the U.S.

Meanwhile, in Slovenia on the occasion of the Prešeren Day, cultural venues offered free access to their performances and exhibitions, and several bookshops opened their doors to mark the holiday. In Ljubljana, where Prešeren worked and created, as traditionally, recitals of his poems were held at the Prešeren Square in the center of town by an association of theater actors and playwrights. As part of the holiday, a reception was also held for the Prešeren Prize and Prešeren Fund laureates. Slovenia's highest awards in culture were handed out on the eve of the holiday, while the winners gathered in Kranj. The winners of the prestigious Prešeren Prizes were cartoonist Miki Muster and poet Andrej Bivar.

Embassy Exhibit at CUA

Slovenian booth was very popular among visitors.

On Friday, January 30, the Catholic University of America (CUA) for the fourth year hosted an Open House and the Embassy Exhibit event, which aimed to capture the sights, sounds, and tastes of global cultures. The Slovenian Embassy was among the exhibitors participating in the International Bazaar, giving the CUA community an opportunity to learn more about what Slovenia has to offer.

The event, featuring cultural displays, performances, and a sampling of foods from around the world, was a great success. More than two dozen embassies in the Washington area accepted the invitation to set up booths and displays, and so did many international student clubs, trade representations and tourist offices. They shared information about their respective cultures and traditions and activities with over 300 attendees.

The Slovenian Embassy presented facts about the country, promoted its tourism sites, and educational opportunities and distributed brochures about Slovenia. The embassy staff also offered a taste of Slovenia's traditional pastry – potica, a sweet walnut roll-cake -- and Carniolian sausages.

Kočevska Reka

Kočevska Reka is the central settlement lying between the crossing points, forests and meadows of the Gotenica–Kočevska Reka valley. The village, with 277 inhabitants, lies at the foot of the Gotenica Snežnik mountain (1290 m – 4232 ft.).

The Kočevje region is famous for its history. Due to the region's isolation, vast forests, harsh climate conditions, karstification, water shortage and bad land-fertility, it has been known as a deserted inaccessible jungle ever since the 13th century. In the 1330's, the Counts of Ortenburg populated the Kočevje region with rebellious German peasants. The geographical remoteness and desertedness of the region provided its people with the opportunity to pass their customs, traditions, folk costumes and speech down from generation to generation.

The largest walnut and the parish church of St. John the Baptist in the village of Kočevska Reka.

The inhabitants kept their German linguistic and cultural background in the Slovenian ethnic territory for over 600 years.

When the Kočevje region was occupied by the Italians at the beginning of WWII, the leaders of the Kočevje Germans opted for relocation. In the fall of 1943, the Kočevje region became the center of the liberated territory, as the First Assembly of Slovenian Delegates was held at the former cultural center Sokolski dom, which is today known as Šeškov dom, in the city of Kočevje. On multiple occasions, the region was swept by various armies and the evacuated villages of the Kočevje Germans suffered immense damage.

The village of Kočevska Reka with its vicinity is known for the status it held from 1949 to 1990, when the area was closed to the public due to the nearby underground facilities and other political-military facilities. The then-closed area of Kočevska Reka covered about 180-200 sq.km. (45,000-50,000 acres) of land, which represents a quarter of the Municipality of Kočevje. It was larger than 16 of the then-existing municipalities. In the summer of 1991, the Slovenian government passed the law re-opening the closed area of Kočevska Reka.

Kočevska Reka is also the cradle of Slovenian statehood. It is there that in December 1990 the First Special MORS Brigade was first presented to the public. The so-called Park of Maneuver Structure of National Defense still reminds of activities that took place during the War of Independence.

In the center of the village of Kočevska Reka, stands the new church of St. John the Baptist. It was built in the same location where stood the old church, destroyed in the years 1953 to 1956 – just like other churches in the area. The new church's interior was designed by the local academic sculptor Stane Jarm.

Next to the church, there is a memorial park with a chestnut promenade and the largest walnut tree in Slovenia. The walnut is over 400 years old, its circumference measures 434 cm (13 ft.) and it is 15 m (50 ft.) tall. Under the tree, stands a stone bench with the year 1696 chiseled into it.

The village also offers original architecture and typical old buildings. The nearby village of Novi Lazi has a cemetery, while another neighboring village, Koče, is the birthplace of Peter Kozler, the founder of the famous Union beer brewery and author of the first map of Slovenian lands.

All of the most interesting corners of Kočevska Reka and its vicinity can be visited riding horseback. Since there are many hiking and biking trails in the proximity of the village, its surroundings can also be discovered on foot or by bicycle. Another beautiful spot in the area is definitely the Reka brook. Its upper stream is dammed and forms an artificial lake. The lake, which is 2 km (1.3 mi. long and up to 6 m (20 ft.) deep, is an important habitat for plants and animals. Together with the surrounding forest it has been proclaimed the Nature Reserve of Jezero. It is the home of the white-tailed eagle and other rare birds. The lake of Reka also offers a good spot for fishing, although only fly-fishing for pike and zander is allowed there.

Another place to visit is the Borovec nature educational trail and take a walk through pristine nature – the jungle of Krokav and the Krempa nature reserve. Each spring, the grass-covered Krempa col transforms into a carpet of daffodils.

EXHIBITION "THINGS" BY BARBARA JURKOVŠEK AND PROJECT "FROM HERE TO THERE" BY ISTVAN IST HUZJAN

The project THINGS, with its seemingly innocent and at the same time grotesque content, creates irony and parody of the spirit of our time, in which the modern man is caught, and, in the metaphorical sense, shows how a man in his struggle for survival and craving for immortality puts at risk not only his own existence but also that of other biological species; from his own essence, he creates psychic and physical hybrids.

Huzjan's work, on the one hand, results in atmospheric, temporary site-specific installations and, on the other, deals with the format of the book he created as a more permanent object. His essential themes are appropriation of his own childhood and the transitional time of the recent European history.
