MINISTRY OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS

NEWSLETTER

JANUARY 23, 2015, VOLUME 11, NUMBER 1

19th Consultation of Slovenian Diplomats

Heads of Slovenia's diplomatic missions and top Foreign Ministry officials met at the Brdo estate on Monday, January 5, for the annual three-day consultation. Minister Erjavec welcomed the participants, underlining that, despite austerities, Slovenian diplomacy has been operating well and responding successfully to all key challenges.

He mentioned that, in 2015, the international community, including Slovenia, is marking the anniversaries of some important milestones in the development of international relations. The First World War centenary commemorations continue; this year will also mark seventy years since the end of Second World War, seventy years since the establishment of the United Nations, forty years since the signing of the Helsinki Final Act, which is one of the pillars of European security structure, and twenty years since the genocide in Srebrenica, which, in addition to the regional context, contributed significantly to the strengthening of international criminal justice and, later, to the responsibility to protect (R2P) principle. "The year 2015 will be the right time for both the international community and Slovenia with its foreign policy to review these milestones and consider what can be learnt from the past and what can still be improved," emphasized Minister Erjavec.

The new year also brings anniversaries of special importance to Slovenia, such as the fortieth anniversary of the Treaty of Osimo, which determined the Slovenian border with Italy and the situation of the Slovenian minority in Italy, and the sixtieth anniversary of the Austrian State Treaty, which is crucial for protecting the rights of the Slovenian minority in Austrian Carinthia and Styria. The minister stressed that relations with neighbors are a vital priority of each country. "I note with pleasure that our bilateral relations are positive, without major outstanding issues, and that all other issues are being resolved through constructive dialogue," he explained. Slovenia's foreign policy will continue to focus on its place and role in Central Europe, including regional integration, which is increasing in strength and importance also in the EU.

Regarding the Western Balkans, the basic goal remains: Slovenia's credible, active, and visible policy on the region is a foreign policy priority. Although Slovenia is not part of the region, its vital political, security and economic interests dictate that the region should adopt the E.U. acquis, values, norms, and customs as soon as possible. Minister Erjavec stated that Slovenia would continue the Brdo Plus Process and announced that a ministerial conference will be held in the spring. One of the core foreign policy issues this year will be the recognition of Palestine. Taking into account all aspects and effects, the Government will propose, at the right time, that the National Assembly recognise Palestine, which it is obliged to do according to the decision of the Committee on Foreign Policy of the National Assembly of November 28, 2014.

The minister voiced concerns about developments in the E.U.'s eastern neighborhood and their impact on the whole of Europe. He underlined that Slovenia will continue to defend the basic principles of the international community and advocate respect for the territorial integrity of states. Slovenia believes that the Ukrainian crisis can be resolved only through dialogue, and will continue its efforts to minimize the impact of the heightened tensions on the national economy. Bilateral dialogue is being conducted with the Russian Federation, which Slovenia is also striving to use to convey coordinated EU positions on security and political issues in the region. Slovenia would also welcome enhanced dialogue on a wide variety of regional and global issues with its key partner and ally, the United States.

Minister Erjavec went on to underline that Slovenia will continue to be an active player in the international multilateral framework, with particular focus on the candidature for the U.N. Human Rights Council; in addition, there will be activities in preventive diplomacy, following the direction mapped out last year in a successful seminar on mediation in the Mediterranean. A similar event on human rights, the rule of law and the responsibility to protect is planned for April. "As to security policy, I would like to underline the need to consider the adequate presence of Slovenia in the U.N.- and E.U.-led missions and operations as well as the continuation of Slovenia's activities as a NATO member to ensure peace and stability in Afghanistan", added Minister Erjavec.

The minister devoted special attention to economic diplomacy, assessing that "the decision to set it as a key Slovenian foreign policy priority proved correct". The third day of consultations, Wednesday January 7, focused entirely on these issues, with an in-depth debate by all key players on the internationalization of the Slovenian economy.

During the consultations, the participants were also addressed by the Slovenian Prime Minister, Dr. Miro Cerar, who pointed to the importance of credibility, also in international relations. One of the Government's most important tasks is the country's economic recovery, where he assessed, Slovenia is on the right track. He agreed with Minister Erjavec that the diplomatic service and its economic diplomacy activities have a very important role in this effort. The Prime Minister also underlined the importance of multilateralism, referring to two strategic documents – the Declaration on Foreign Policy, and the Foreign Policy Strategy – as this year's major foreign policy projects.

PM Cerar and MFA Erjavec Join the Unity Rally in Paris

About 200 people, mostly journalists and politicians, turned up for the rally in the capital city, which, like the event in Maribor, was organized by the Slovenian Association of Journalists.

On January 11, Minister Erjavec and Prime Minister Cerar attended the unity rally in Paris, organized in memory of the victims of the recent terrorist attacks in Paris, as a gesture of solidarity with France and the French nation. Rallies were held in Ljubljana and Maribor on January 8 as an expression of solidarity with France and condemnation of the attack on the Paris offices of the satirical weekly Charlie Hebdo. On behalf of the Embassy of Slovenia, Deputy Chief of Mission, Vladimir Kolmanič joined on January 11 the march in Washington, DC, which began at the Newseum downtown and finished at the National Law Enforcement Officers Memorial.

The international community must stand together in unity and solidarity in condemning terrorism. With the development of modern technologies – particularly in the new millennium – terrorism has become a complex global problem. No country is completely immune to terrorist attacks, and consequently the response to them should be universal.

As a responsible member of the United Nations, Slovenia is of one mind with its partners and allies in the E.U. and NATO. We firmly believe that the response to the threats posed to modern civilization by terrorism should not involve solely repression; in its reaction, the international community should also address the circumstances which might lead to radicalization, violent extremism and terrorism.

Efforts for strengthened security must not become the only goal guiding our actions, for this might lead to marginalization of fundamental human rights and freedoms. Our common response must be in line with international law, human rights, fundamental values and assumed international commitments.

The attack in Paris was also an attack on the freedom of speech and expression, and an attack on the media. Political satire is an important element of the media as well as one of the indicators of a society's democracy. The rights to freedom and safety, freedom of religion and other beliefs, freedom of thought and expression, and freedom of association are universal in nature and cannot be denied or curtailed to anyone.

Terrorism should not be associated with any religion, race or belief. Muslims all over the world condemned the attack in the center of Paris in the strongest terms. When responding to the tragic events such as the attacks in Paris we must all – as a community and as individuals – avoid any collectivization of guilt and creation of stereotypes related to particular ethnic or religious groups, for this leads to a vicious circle of intolerance and hatred. In addition to the state, civil society has an important role in expressing solidarity with the victims of terrorism.

President Pahor expressed condolences for the families of the victims as he signed a book of condolences at the French Embassy in Ljubljana.

Carmina Slovenica Performs in New York

The ensemble and the conductor Karmina Šilec after the first show.

The internationally acclaimed Slovenian girls' choir Carmina Slovenica, presented its new project "Toxic Psalms: Ultimate Collective Experience" to the North American public at a festival in New York between January 8 and 11.

The ensemble is renowned for its unconventional choral storytelling, which combines opera, drama and movement. In New York, it staged five 90-minute performances at St. Ann's Warehouse in Brooklyn as part of Prototype festival. A global festival of opera-theater and music-theater is co-produced by Beth Morrison Projects and HERE, the leading names in contemporary, post-classical, multidisciplinary opera-theater and music-theater production.

Channeling ancient and modern humanities, the ensemble of 31 young women tried to invoke

Africa, the Middle East, Pussy Riots, weapons, concentration camps, blood feuds, extinctions, and contamination of religions, and, through music, created a reflection of human brutality.

Artistic director and conductor, Karmina Šilec, outlined that Toxic Psalms are not a show that follows a story, but rather "a kind of an internal experiment within the ensemble itself with the relationships among its members and in relation to external authorities". In a conversation following Saturday's performance, she explained that the idea of presenting the phenomenon of response of an individual and a collective to authority is loosely based on the writings of German political theorist Hannah Arendt, who followed the trial of Adolf Eichmann, one of the major organizers of the Holocaust. Eichmann defended himself by saying that he was following orders from his superiors.

The New Yorker magazine paid a tribute to the ensemble with its typical illustration by Jeffrey Alan Love whereas The New York Times described the performance as a "striking new work by the rabidly talented Slovenian female vocal ensemble". Next to complimenting Ms. Šilec as savvy about maintaining dramatic momentum and executing every shift of the performance in tone with subtlety and agility..", The NYT also gave recognition to costumes by Belinda Radulović and lighting design by Andrej Hajdinjak.

Ambassador Dr. Cerar attended the performance on January 10. Among others the project was supported by the Ministry of Culture of the Republic of Slovenia. More about Carmina Slovenica can be found at the website: <http://www.carmina-slovenica.si/en/>
