Next day, the chief of the National Guard Bureau and the Slovenian ambassador to the U.S. described at a press conference developments that have grown out of the partnership between the Colorado National Guard and the Republic of Slovenia. "The nearly quarter century of partnership between Colorado and Slovenia has tremendous value for our nations and allies," said Major General H. Michael Edwards. involves a refugee crisis, and the threat of terrorism,” he stressed. The Colorado-Slovenia partnership dates to 1993 when United States European Command employed the National Guard to assist nations in Central and Eastern Europe in preparing for NATO membership

During his visit to Colorado, Ambassador Dr. Božo Cerar also visited the city of Pueblo, where a large American-Slovenian immigration community resides. Puebloans of Slovenian heritage gave a warm welcome to the ambassador Saturday morning, first, with an appreciation breakfast where he was presented with an honorary proclamation from city leaders. After the breakfast, the ambassador toured the Gorsick Technology Center at Pueblo Community College, where he was greeted by College President, Dr. Patty Erjavec. From there, he took a trip to St. Mary’s Slovenian Library and Gorsick Genealogy Center. The ambassador brought gifts for the collection, including

He was succeeded by Mr. Lucky Vidmar, a Slovenian honorary consul, with offices in Denver, who arranged the ambassador’s visit.

Slovenian Films Screened at the 11th Annual SEEFest Film Festival in Los Angeles

The program of the 11th annual South East European Film Festival featured two Slovenian productions: comedy noir Bright Black (Svetlo črna) and a documentary, Home (Dom). The first one, screened on Saturday, April 30 at the Goethe Institute in Los Angeles, was directed by Rene Maurin. The story was inspired by a narrative element of an ancient Japanese folk tale “Miso kai bashi” and discusses certain clichés which society forces upon its members.

The second one, a documentary by Metod Pevec, explains how once a temporary housing facility for construction workers, a five-story building, now serves as a home for socially marginalized people: youths who fled home, workers who lost their jobs to corporate bankruptcy and tenants evicted from other apartments, who all tell their powerful stories.

The SEE Fest Festival every year presents films from Southeast Europe that make a cultural connection with American audiences. The opening-night screening of this year’s festival, which took place April 28 – May 5 in Los Angeles, California, presented a co-production by Bosnia and Herzegovina, Slovenia, and Croatia, titled Our Everyday Life. In the week-long program, the festival presented around 40 productions, among them feature films, documentaries and shorts.

THE BEAT OF LOVE (UTRIP LJUBEZNI) AT THE PANORAMA EUROPE FILM FESTIVAL IN NEW YORK

From mind-bending genre experiments that reinvent the musical, sci-fi film, and horror movie, to gripping dramatic features and documentaries capturing the tenuous nature of modern life for a variety of wanderers and refugees, Panorama Europe 2016 is a vibrant selection of some of the finest and most riveting films coming out of Europe today. Filled with New York premieres, often with the filmmakers in person, this is a great opportunity to discover some of the most exciting new international filmmakers. This year’s festival will take place at the Museum of the Moving Image in Queens and at the Bohemian National Hall in Manhattan.

Directed by Boris Petkovič. 2015, 77 mins. In Slovenian with English subtitles. With Judita Frankovič, Jernej Gašperin, Žlatan Cordič Zlatko. This infectious ode to Slovenia’s hip-hop subculture bursts with music and energy. Bruno (Jernej Gašperin) and his friends live for hip-hop—the tagging, the beat-boxing, and the rap battles. After winning a free-style competition, Bruno seems to be on the path to success. But when he falls for violinist Nina (Judita Frankovič), he finds himself torn between love and music. A winning blend of rap, romance, and comedy, The Beat of Love captures the highs, lows, and intoxicating abandon of youth.

Presented by the Embassy of the Republic of Slovenia and the Slovenian Film Center.
