Idrija Municipal Museum's Permanent Exhibition: Idrija Lace

Bobbin lace with stylized plant motifs.

Lacemaking requisites and materials.

What better way to learn about Slovenia's history, art and heritage than by visiting various museums spread throughout the country? When making a list of things to do in Slovenia, do not forget about interesting galleries and museum collections. We will do our best to introduce as many as possible in our newsletter.

Idrija is known throughout the country and abroad as a reputed bobbin lacemaking center. Idrija lace is a type of hand-made bobbin lace that boasts a tradition of several centuries. With the selected specimens we wish to present the story of the richness of Idrija lace and its place in the Slovenian and broader European environment, in the lives of individuals and the community, its influence on the formation of artistic horizons, its significance for economic development, and an opportunity for friendly relations and socializing. The exhibition is divided into eight thematic groups, which present the key characteristics and activities defining Idrija lace.

The first group focuses on bobbin lace in Europe within the context of space and time. Displayed are lace pieces from the 17th century, which were made in some of the oldest lacemaking centers. Also exhibited are some prestigious pieces of women's lace clothing worn by the upper social classes according to the fashion that dominated the second half of the 19th century. The displayed bobbin lacemaking requisites from various parts of Europe reveal certain particularities of individual lacemaking centers.

The development of Idrija lace in terms of technology and design is presented from its beginnings to the present day with the help of old lace patterns and preserved documents. Initially, continuous lace was made in Idrija by the meter (3.3 ft.), while in the 19th century lace began to be worked in parts (non-continuous lace). During the 1870, tape-lace worked in parts became predominant and gained widespread recognition throughout Europe under the name of Idrija lace.

The first document about bobbin lacemaking in Idrija dates from the end of the 17th century and speaks of lace trading, or more precisely, peddling. Peddlers were small merchants who purchased small goods, among others also lace pieces, and sold them travelling from one village to another. Peddling was closely connected with the smuggling of lace. Regular lace trading began to flourish in Idrija in the second half of the 19th century, and was mostly based on home manufacturing. Today, the leading role in lace sales has been assumed by small private studios and workshops.

A small part of the earnings from the sale of lace went to lacemakers, whose tireless work provided miners' families with a modest, yet important additional source of income. The role and significance of lacemaking in public life has gradually changed, and for most lacemakers today represents a way of passing their leisure time.

The Lacemaking School in Idrija began to operate in 1876, although this craft had already been taught in less formally organized types of training many years beforehand. The School's first lacemaking teacher was a native of Idrija, Ivana Ferjančič (1850–1879). The Idrija school was significantly marked by its cooperation with the Central Lacemaking Course in Vienna (1879–1904), which had the task of promoting the lacemaking craft in all Austro-Hungarian lands. Despite the difficult circumstances, the Lacemaking School operated continuously. Today, it provides afternoon courses to around 400 students, and various forms of training are also offered to adults.

An important role in popularizing Idrija bobbin lace throughout Slovenia and beyond its borders is also played by the Idrija Lace Festival. This ethnological, economic, educational, cultural and entertaining event attracts countless visitors each year. The main focus of attention is the lacemaking competition, where both children and adults participate.

In the past, the role and significance of lace in society was defined primarily by the use of lace as trimming for clothing and household textiles. The Church continued to be the largest user of lace at the beginning of the 20th century. Lace was needed to decorate church linens, liturgical garments and other devotional pieces. Today, Idrija lace is an integral part of Slovenian cultural heritage, which is why it has been given to many distinguished individuals as a protocolary gift. Since it has been losing its traditional role, modern Idrija lace is difficult to define, and appears most frequently in the creations of designers as an abstraction that has already entered the realms of art.

The treasure chest of lace stores, in its nucleus, lace pieces represent the peak of expressive beauty of Idrija lace. Among them are the oldest, the smallest, the most complicated, the loveliest, ... and all of them are there for us to admire with sincerity and respect for the generations of lacemakers who created them.

BOUND - A DANCE PERFORMANCE BY JURIJ KONJAR IN ROCKVILLE, MD, ON APRIL 15, 16

Bound (created in 1982, performed by Jurij Konjar) is a dance performance composed of vignettes; each one is isolated, but like numbers in a column, they begin to add up to something larger as they accumulate. Some episodes are dry but resonate poetic thoughts. Some are unchoreographed dance remarks. The music is eclectic, and the images are not immediately logical.

Bound, choreographed by Steve Paxton, will be performed by Slovenian dancer and choreographer Jurij Konjar. The two artists formed a unique collaboration following an accident in which Konjar suffered a traumatic brain injury. He used improvisation and investigations into Paxton's work in his subsequent recovery. Bound continues both artists' interest in improvisational dance and finding the potential of the present moment.

Steve Paxton, winner of two Bessies, was one of the founders of Judson Dance Theater, Grand Union, Contact Improvisation and performed with the Merce Cunningham Dance Co.

SLOVENE RESEARCH INITIATIVE LECTURE: CONTEXTUALIZING FEMALE MIGRATION AND HUMAN TRAFFICKING: THE CASE OF SLOVENIA

The Slovene Research Initiative will feature a lecture by Dr. Simona Zavratnik (Faculty of Social Sciences at the University of Ljubljana) and Dr. Sanja Cukut Krilić (Research Center of the Slovenian Academy of Sciences and Arts)

Internal migration within the former socialist Yugoslavia, the formation of the nation-state of Slovenia, and its accession to the European Union provide three main socio-political contextual bases for studying female migration to Slovenia. Even though immigration to Slovenia is still predominantly male, there has recently been certain indications of its feminization. Although extensive research on migration processes in general has been carried out, there is still quite an absence of gendered research. Through selected case-studies of female immigrants from non-EU countries in Slovenia (especially Bosnia and Herzegovina, and countries of the former Soviet Union), we will point to their essentialized representations in public discourses, to the main gaps in statistical data, and to the main challenges the transnational movement of the population poses at the level of 'fortress Europe'.

When: Wednesday, April 27, 3:00 to 4:30 p.m.

Where: Thompson Library 150 A/B, Ohio State University, Columbus, Ohio 43210
